

Keen for an electronic barman? It's called the Sidebar system, and can be installed anywhere. Whether in your restaurant or club; the Sidebar goes where you go.

Getting that drink...

It all happens with the tap of a membrane touchpad. After selection, the drink is delivered via a stainless steel spout into your glass.

The Sidebar system can house up to five bottles of alcohol (pulp-free, non-carbonated beverages only). With five separate pumps, the flexible tubing individually transports the respective beverage, without any intermixing from bottle to spout.

The touchpad, which is installed on the bar/counter top, is made from aluminium, and fits flush onto the surface of your choice. There is a single spout (available in brush and electro-polished stainless steel) next to the touchpad. Pumps are housed in a tamper-proof hard plastic box, along with all working parts, and can be installed under the counter and locked.

How it all works

The Sidebar comes completely assembled, and is easily installed. Programmed to 25 ml tots, the units are recorded through computer software. Once the drink has been dispensed, the information is sent to the computer and stored.

The programme is based on a stock vessel of 4.5 litres or 7.5 litres. As each tot is dispensed, the software deducts 25 ml. A manager or designated person is provided with a code, which allows access to the computer to monitor consumption.

When things run low

When the stock vessel drops to 1 litre, a red line will flash across the screen for that particular line/beverage. The barman can then install three 750 ml bottles into the stock vessel, and enter the amount into the computer. The computer will calculate the amount of tots in stock. Should the barman /manager enter an incorrect amount on the computer, it will detect inconsistencies in the volumes consumed.

What do people want?

Market research has shown that the public would rather see what they are ordering. The solution is to split the counter cupboards in half with glass panels. The stock vessel can be installed at the back, with the 750 ml bottles on display in front, giving the perception of that line being dispensed.

For more information, contact Lance: 076 306 6648 / 033 330 5180
E-mail: sales@supersidebar.co.za

Sidebar has a one year (limited) warranty.